STOCK INFORMATION SITES ON LINE

<http://www.google.com/> GOOGLE. I am amazed at how few use Google for other than obscure stuff. I use Google as a dictionary ["do you mean ___"], and Google doesn't require capital letters for a proper noun or anything else, and if you enter the stock symbol of a stock you will get a flood of information.

Daily

<http://www.dogsofthedow.com/> Dogs of the Dow. Not recommended by me, but what say others. Notion I believe is that what is down might come back.

<http://www.irs.ustreas.gov/> Internal Revenue Service. Be honest with them! Forms on line also. But Google. It might sometimes be easier.

<http://moneycentral.msn.com/investor/finder/customstocksdl.asp> This is an excellent stock screener. You can search only for stocks with high dividends. Or you can search for a combination of variables, like a high dividend AND a low P/E. Also, many other sites have search screeners. If you have an online broker, try their search engines.

GOOGLE ANYTHING

GOOGLE DOES NOT DISTINGUISH SMALL LETTERS VS. LARGE CAP LETTERS
GOOGLE RECOGNIZES STOCK SYMBOLS. THUS ENTER EXXONMOBIL OR XOM OR xom: You get the same result.

GOOGLE ALSO RECOGNIZES MANY ARITHMETIC FORMULAI: E.G., P/E, EPS.

Check EPS vs. dividend to see if there is room for a dividend increase. XOM e.g., EPS is 6.92 and dividend is 1.40. Room for dividend increase, but don't expect it. HE (Hawaiian Electric Industries, Inc.) has a better than 5% dividend but current earnings per share of 74 cents and a dividend of $1.24. TEG (Integrated Energy Group) EPS 3.32 and dividend of 2.64 ((5.20%)
PSD (Puget Energy) EPS of 1.59 and dividend of 1.00 3.6% Want stocks in likely terrorist attack cities? NYC: KEYSpan, CON EDISON, D.C.: POM. WEST COAST?
