

Mac 101: Address Book

Whether you've got all your contacts stored neatly in an electronic device or are still hanging on to your tattered address book, personal organizer, or business card collection, Address Book makes it simple to manage your contacts.

Address Book keeps all your VIPs right at your fingertips.

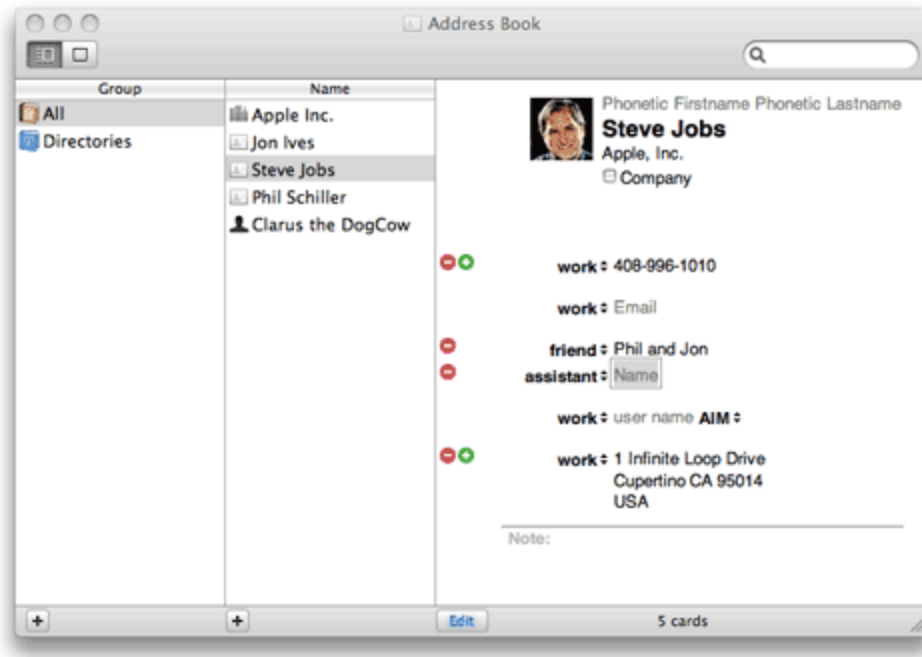

Address Book allows you to enter all sorts of information about a person, including his or her email addresses, phone numbers, addresses, websites, chat names, names of the important people in his or her life (including spouse, partner, mom, dad, siblings, and assistant), and more. And because it's a system-wide application, you can email, chat, or visit a contact's website directly from an Address Book card. You can even print address labels.

Products Affected

Mac OS X 10.0, Mac OS X 10.3, Mac OS X 10.2, Mac OS X 10.1, Mac OS X 10.4, Mac OS X 10.6, Mac OS X 10.5, Address Book

Create a new contact

If you want to add someone to Address Book, here's how to create a new card.

Enter as much or as little contact information as you wish; if you leave a field blank, it won't appear in the final card.

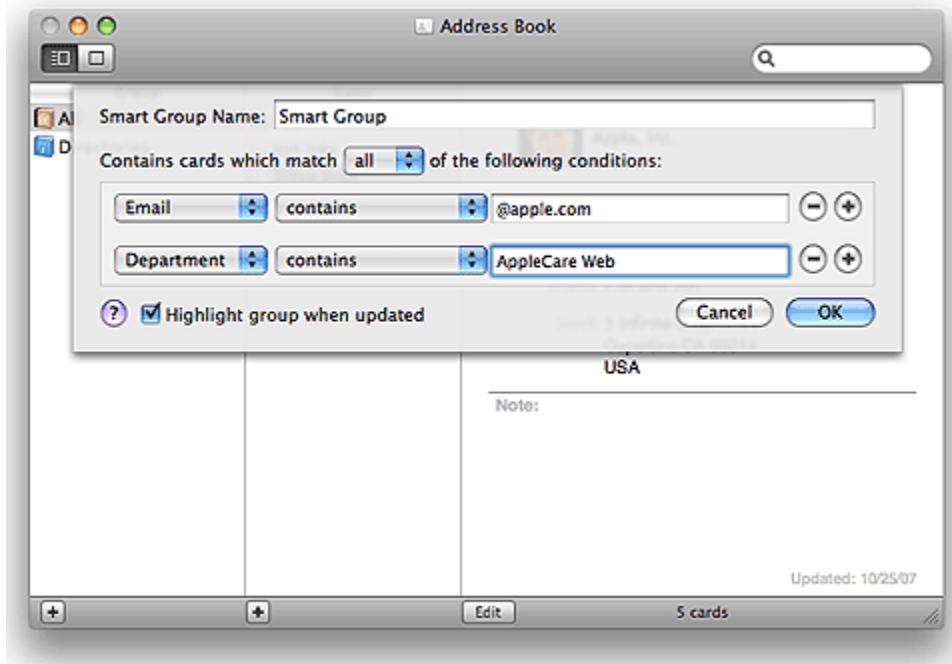

1. Open Address Book from the Dock. The interface displays a Group column on the left (for grouping contacts), a Name column in the middle (that displays all contact names in your selected group), and a card pane on the right (for viewing a selected contact's information).
2. Click the plus sign (+) button below the Name column to create a new contact card.
3. Enter the person's name and contact information in the designated fields, just click a field and type away. Note that each type of contact (Phone, Email, Names, addresses, and so on) is grouped in sections on the card.
4. Some of the fields display a pop-up menu to their left, allowing you to choose a label for that field. For example, if you want to enter someone's cell phone number, click the pop-up menu next to any Phone field and choose mobile.
5. If you have more contact information than the allotted fields, click the green plus sign (+) that appears in that category section to add another field.
6. To add additional fields, from the Card menu, choose Add Field, then choose a category from the submenu (such as URL, Birthday, or Job Title).
7. If you want to add any extra information, type it in the Note section.

8. You can have Address Book display a picture of the person or any image that you want. To add a picture, just drag any image file onto the square next to the person's name at the top of the card.
9. When finished, choose Save from the File menu (or press Command-S).

Using Address Book

Here are some of the things you can do in Address Book.

- To send an email to one of your contacts, select the person's name in the Name column, click the label to the left of the email address to open the pop-up menu, and choose Send Email.
- If you prefer to see only contact cards instead of the three-pane display, click the "View card only" button in the toolbar in the upper-left corner. To pull up someone's contact information, either type his or her name in the search field or use the arrow buttons on the bottom-right corner to scroll through your contacts.
- If you want to be able to address a group of people in an email instead of entering all their email addresses, create a group. Click the plus sign (+) button below the Group column, type a name for your group, select All in the Group column, and then drag names from the Name column onto your new group in the Group column to add them.
- You can also create a Smart Group, a group that automatically updates itself if any contact fits the same search criteria you set for a Smart Group. To create a Smart Group, choose New Smart Group from the File menu, type a name in the Smart Group Name field, set your search criteria using the pop-up menus and fields, for example, choose Company from the first pop-up menu and type a company name in the field to create a Smart Group of people at that company, and click OK. Any contacts that match your search criteria will become part of this Smart Group.

If you frequently send email to a group of people, like all your coworkers, create a Smart Group, which automatically updates on its own.

- If you miss having a tangible address book, print out a pocket-sized version of Address Book. Select the names that you want to include from the Names column, or select a group, and choose Print from the File menu. In the resulting dialog, choose Pocket Address Book from the Style pop-up menu, select any other options you want, and click Print.
- It's also a good idea to back up your Address Book. See below in blue.

Tip: Want to learn more about Address Book? Check out the built-in Address Book Help guide on your Mac (in Address Book, choose Address Book Help from the Help menu).

Backing up Address Book

You can create a backup copy of your address book, so you can easily recover your original information if you make inadvertent changes.

It's a good idea to back up your address book before you make extensive changes, such as importing new addresses or reorganizing groups.

- To back up your address book, choose File > Back Up Database and choose a location for the backup file.

- To undo all recent changes and return to your last backed-up version, choose File > "Revert to Database Backup" and locate the backup file. Any new cards or information you've changed since you last created a backup will be lost. Any deleted items will be recovered.
- To save a copy of your Address Book for safekeeping, copy the Address Book file to another location (such as an external hard disk or a CD).

If you have a .Mac account, you can also use Apple's iSync to back up your Address Book to your iDisk. For more information, open iSync and choose Help > iSync Help.

Website address below:

<http://docs.info.apple.com/article.html?path=AddressBook/4.0/en/ad961.html>

AddressBook 4.0 Help

Backing up Address Book